

ABSTRACT

This study was conducted to find out how the wedding process of students who make weddings in the study period. The purpose of this study is to find out how interpersonal communication and communication patterns used in the wedding process of students in the study period, especially in Bandung.

This research uses qualitative method with constructivist paradigm and using phenomenological research approach. Data collection technique used is semiterstruktur interview with number of key informant counted 6 people. Supported by supporting informants as much as 2 people.

Based on the results of interpersonal communication research that occurred between the informants and pairs formed the same pattern of ta'aruf, khitbah, and akad which is a wedding ritual performed in accordance with Islamic Shari'a, and this communication pattern occurs as a result of the influence of group communication and informant environment, This group of informants' behavior is called conformity. The conclusion of this study, the process of marriage conducted by students in the study period is done by using the process of marriage rituals in accordance with Islamic religious law that is influenced by group communication and the environment.

Keywords: Marriage, Interpersonal Communication, Communication Patterns