

ABSTRACT

Race is a categorization system that classifies populations on the basis of physical attribute references such as skin color and other bodily operations (Hartley, 2010: 255). This classification often shows the superiority of a race that feels itself better than the other. According to Hartley (2010: 255), the concept of race itself is similar to the concept of the nation, is relational-each race is a product of the extension of perbedannya with other races in the system. In the 1960s, were periods in which black-colored movements undertook massive demonstrations to gain equal rights to the white race. The climax was a speech from the Reverend and black activist, Marthin Luther King Jr. at Lincoln Monument. This speech made civil rights (Civil Rights Act) issued in 1964. Movie Get Out is a horror film genre directed by Jordan Peele. The film revolves around Chris, a black boy who visits the home of his girlfriend, Rose, who is white. Upon arriving at the house, Chris then gets and also feels the racist behavior of his girlfriend's family. Based on the results of the research, there is a representation of racism in this film which is described by the Armitage family's behavior toward black figures in this film
