

the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are aged 65 and over has increased from 10.5 million to 13.5 million, and the number of people aged 75 and over has increased from 4.5 million to 6.5 million (Office for National Statistics 2000).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of older people, and the need to ensure that they are able to live independently in their own homes for as long as possible. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the development of new housing schemes, the provision of services to support older people in their homes, and the development of new models of care.

One of the key challenges is to ensure that older people are able to live independently in their own homes for as long as possible. This requires a range of services, including housing, health care, and social care. The challenge is to ensure that these services are coordinated and integrated, so that older people can receive the support they need in a timely and effective way.

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of older people, and the need to ensure that they are able to live independently in their own homes for as long as possible. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the development of new housing schemes, the provision of services to support older people in their homes, and the development of new models of care.

One of the key challenges is to ensure that older people are able to live independently in their own homes for as long as possible. This requires a range of services, including housing, health care, and social care. The challenge is to ensure that these services are coordinated and integrated, so that older people can receive the support they need in a timely and effective way.

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of older people, and the need to ensure that they are able to live independently in their own homes for as long as possible. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the development of new housing schemes, the provision of services to support older people in their homes, and the development of new models of care.

One of the key challenges is to ensure that older people are able to live independently in their own homes for as long as possible. This requires a range of services, including housing, health care, and social care. The challenge is to ensure that these services are coordinated and integrated, so that older people can receive the support they need in a timely and effective way.

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of older people, and the need to ensure that they are able to live independently in their own homes for as long as possible. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the development of new housing schemes, the provision of services to support older people in their homes, and the development of new models of care.

One of the key challenges is to ensure that older people are able to live independently in their own homes for as long as possible. This requires a range of services, including housing, health care, and social care. The challenge is to ensure that these services are coordinated and integrated, so that older people can receive the support they need in a timely and effective way.