Cimahi batik brand communication strategy has five stages namely identifying the audience, determining communication objectives, designing messages, choosing communication channels and make decisions on the promotion mix. Based on

In the process of designing the message to consider the purpose of communication through the approach of six (6) levels of response, so that each level has a different response to the design of the message (content, structure and format). Determination of the promotional mix more focused on advertising, too, the selection of media advertising communication in addition to considering the advantages of the media, is also aligned with the target audience point of contact. Similarly scheduling media use within a period of one year, ie from 6 (six) phases distributed or paired with twelve (12) months so that each stage is equal to two (2) months. From every level response scheduled, resulting in the use of diverse, meaning that the possibility arises that the same media used at different stages of media such as the internet and newspapers are used fully to the six (6) levels of response.

Efforts to introduce batik batik Cimahi have differences that have existed long before the batik Cimahi born of a tradition and the palace became the birthplace of the culture of batik in the main area of the archipelago batik batik region of Central Java. Efforts have been made in research conducted focused on the formation of identity and brand strategy in Batik Cimahi communicate to the two sides of the target audience that is loyal customers and prospective customers. The effort is an effort that is different from the traditional effort for a batik can be known, consumed and embedded in the minds of customers. It is also considering the purpose and function of inherent use of a type of batik; between traditional and contemporary, different and can not be equated with each other.

Efforts in research conducted centered on scientific design focuses on a process of visual communication product thereby increasing the sale value of the products offered. The theory used as an approach in designing the communication strategy refers to the branding strategy that was introduced Knapp (2002) and the brand communication strategy put forward Kotler (1998). Based on the theory of reference, resulting logo design and brand communication strategies. Given the time constraints and problems were found as well as considering the complex and breadth of a theory to be applied as an approach to research, there are many shortcomings that can not be fulfilled. So for researchers who want to carry on similar studies, can equip it in various ways, among others, on the approach AIDCA (Attention Interest Desire Action Confiction) to stage a response hierarchy, selecting sampling more and more complex, testing of selected media and promotional mix not only focused on advertising but on other promotional tools such as sales promotion, public relations and publicity.

For parties associated with batik Cimahi, in this case the employers and the government of Cimahi city, Cimahi batik brand position is in the area to keep and maintain, so that strategies can be done is to market penetration and product development. Market penetration efforts made can refer to the communication strategy has been designed in the study with the continuous pattern of scheduling media use brand marketing communications based on the period and synergized with the level of response to be achieved. However, as a cautionary note, the market penetration efforts will be a significant obstacle when product development is static, without innovation.
