Family is a social unit consisting of people who are related by blood such as parents, children and siblings. The family has a very important role in child development such as education, mental health, and social development. One of the important aspects in the family is education or parenting carried out by parents, parenting can affect children's development in many ways. In terms of parenting, it is important for parents to pay attention to the needs and skills of their children, parents must understand that each child is unique, parents must also pay sufficient attention to children. The attitude of parents who do not support children's hobbies and dreams can cause children to feel unappreciated and unsupported by those closest to them. This can reduce a child's motivation to pursue his hobby and lower his self-esteem. Therefore, efforts were made to visualize this problem through experimental films that seek to make each individual aware of the issue of non-supportive parenting. Make some parents aware that a child has his own dream.
