

ABSTRACT

Office Is an organization that consists of three elements, namely place, personnel, and operations that help manage an organization. The function of this office is to provide a service, receive, store, and protect company data or assets. PT. Infiniti Reka Solusi is an office engaged in technology, software development and communications. This office is located in Jakarta, Indonesia. During the COVID-19 pandemic, several companies implemented Work From Home (WFH) for their employees. However, after the pandemic situation improved, employees were asked to return to the office, which made employees have new habits that were created during WFH. Office design trends that are emerging in 2022 are bringing home comforts into office interiors. This design trend can be applied to PT. Infiniti Reka Solusi who need a comfortable work environment because of the nature of their activities working in front of a computer. This office has several problems such as circulation in several areas that do not meet ergonomic standards, the interior of the office does not reflect corporate identity in its interior, the selection of furniture needs to be adjusted to the activities and needs of workers, and the interior of this office has not yet implemented an office interior that can improve worker performance. The purpose of this design research is to provide solutions that can improve the comfort and safety of visitors, users and employees while improving office interior design to improve employee performance. This study used a qualitative research method which conducted interviews or questionnaires with PT employees. Infiniti Design Solutions. It is hoped that this report will provide readers with an overview of the design of an office and can be a means of solving problems in designing an office
