

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

With deep gratitude, I would like to begin by thanking Prof. Chao-Lung Yang as my thesis advisor at NTUST, for his steady guidance, thoughtful advice, and endless encouragement throughout this research journey. His trust in my capabilities and his calm, insightful mentorship has meant more than words can express. I am also truly grateful to Ms. Ilma Mufidah and Mr. Deni Akbar as my Advisors at Telkom University. Their encouragement and academic direction helped me stay grounded and focused, to finish my thesis work.

To all the professors and staff of the Department of Industrial Management, NTUST, thank you for fostering an environment filled with warmth, curiosity, and intellectual growth. Your support behind the scenes, both in the classroom and beyond has enriched my time here.

My heartfelt thanks go to my parents, my family, whose unwavering love has carried me through every step of this journey. Their endless support, patience, faith, and quiet sacrifices have been the invisible pillars behind this journey. I am deeply grateful for their presence, encouragement, and belief in me, even during the most challenging moments.

I am also thankful for the friendship and support of my peers from Telkom University, NTUST, and my lab mates in TR-1036. Thank you for the laughter, the shared frustrations, and the small victories we celebrated together. This journey would have felt much heavier without you guys.

Lastly, I acknowledge that this thesis may still have limitations. I sincerely welcome any constructive feedback and hope that this work can contribute meaningfully to future research and the advancement of knowledge.
