

ABSTRACT

Football fan riots in Indonesia remain a terrifying phenomenon. This study aims to examine how the media outlets Kompas.com and Detikcom construct news coverage of fan riots accompanied by attacks on stewards. The news coverage was published during the period of September 23–27, 2024, and three news articles were selected from each media outlet, totaling six news articles. This study employs a descriptive qualitative approach. The analysis model used is Robert N. Entman's. The issues selected by Kompas.com are based on statements made by relevant parties, such as the police, PSSI, Persib Bandung management and players, as well as humanitarian issues, which became the main topics of the news reports. Meanwhile, detikcom's news coverage focused more on the people who caused the riots, commonly referred to as the perpetrators, the losses that would be suffered by Persib Bandung, and the responses from representatives of PT LIB, the operations department, and the chairman of PSSI, Erck Thohir. Kompas.com emphasizes humanity and caution, while detikcom uses more daring language and highlights the impact of the riots on the club and the overall competition.
