

Although the challenges in branding can be immense and difficult, branding is not necessary rocket science. In fact, it is an art and a science. There's always a creativity and original component involved with marketing. Even if someone were to follow all the guidelines in this book – and all guidelines were properly specified – the success or failure of a brand strategy would still depend largely on how. Exactly this strategy would be implemented.

